THE REVENUE BUSINESS.

Speaking of revenue, government revenue, the Montreal Star some little time ago went into the question of how it should be levied. Whether a man shall have his tea free and pay duty on his clothes, or vice versa. It said, "if the tax be put upon his tea, nothing happens save a rise in the price of that popular beverage, whereas if it be put upon his clothes, a factory for making these clothes may be started in his own town with the effect of increasing population and the value of everything he possesses. To prove that this injures the man is indeed a herculean task."

This is all right enough and worth examination, but as an exchange points out, the man in question might soliloquize somewhat as follows: I am willing to pay my share of the taxes for the necessities of an economical government. I am not willing to be taxed in order to increase the income of my neighbor, or to secure for him a higher price for his goods than that for which they can be procured elsewhere. If my tea is taxed, I know that the amount of the tax, less the cost of collection goes directly to the government. The aim is simple; the method direct and effective. But if my clothing is taxed, with the double purpose of raising a revenue and creating an industry by protection a see saw takes the place of a straight line. The two objects are incompatible, and contradictory. Just so far as the tax goes to the government, i.e. just so long as I continue to import my clothing, the home factory is not helped. On the other hand just so far as my tea goes to aid the home factory i.e. just so far as I purchase its products, no revenue results. I pay the tax to the clothing manufacturer and I must be taxed on something else to make good the deficiency to the government. In that case I am not only supporting my family and paying my share of taxes to the government out of the proceeds of my own industry, whatever it may be, but am also being taxed for the support of a competitor of my neighbor to just the extent to which the price of my clothing is increased by the tax. Evidently to use a current metaphor more expressive than elegant, the government cannot at the same time eat its cake and give it to the manufacturer of clothing.

HAY IN ENGLAND.

There has been a shortness of the hay crop in England this year, and an official statement has just been published showing the amount of hay imported in the United Kingdom during the month of June and the six months ending June 30th last, together with corresponding figure for 1892. The total quantity of hay imported during the month of June 1893 was 9,045 tons as against 4,459 in 1892, and we notice that Canada is not credited with a single ton of hay for the month of June in either year. Coming now to the six months ending June 30th we find the total quantity of hay imported was 62,766 tons for 1893 as against 24,066 in 1892, Canada's contributions to these figures being respectively 4,972 and 2,601. Our showing it must be admitted, is inconsiderable as compared with our neighbor in the United States.

In the same month of 1892 they sent 1,705 tons and for the six months ending the 30th of last June 36,451, as against 7,422 in the same period of 1892. There can be no question that our farmers in the east had sufficient notice this year of the keen demand for hay in the English market, but they seem to have profited little by it. They themselves, we believe, were not irresponsive to the demand. The fault is chargeable to the dealers who went about the country offering normal prices for an article out of which they expected to pocket all the profit. The farmers who could not ship their hay independently of such agents did well to keep it. There is every prospect that the demand will continue in England for imported hay, and that more favorable conditions of sale to the farmers will be offered.

What a pity we couldn't do something with our surplus hay of which millions of tons go to waste every year, and if the prairie hay is not good enough for them, grow them some timothy. We fancy neither the East or the United States could cut us out there. Here again the question of rates come in though. At the present a ton of hay shipped from here to the Old Country would be worth by the time it reached there the purchasing value of a good many dozen tons, and we are therefore barred from competing.

CHINA AND THE STATES.

The Yankee and the Mongolian are at it again, and from all accounts Uncle Sam is going to be treated to a slice of his own meat. After the well established custom of the Chinese diplomat, a certain high and mighty star of the Celestial empire has been giving vent to his feelings. He says—Ching Chin—or Ching Wow, or whatever his name is, that unless there is an immediate repeal of the Exclusion act China will retaliate and will exclude citizens of the United States from the Chinese empire. Coming from two such high dignitaries as the minister plenipotentiary to the trinity of nations before mentioned, and the first of the Emperor's viceroys, these threats must be very terrifying to the United States and demand their attention. One of the most noteworthy results of this attention is the conclusion that Chinese diplomats do not employ that carefully selected language accredited to their brethren of the Asiatic and European school. They employ the colloquialisms of ordinary mortals, drop readily into the slang of the man in the street, and tattle and scold like village gossips. The minister of the empire of the pig tails puts one phase of the Chinese question something after this fashion.

"You say that Chinamen come to America and save all the money they can and then take it home with them—that they don't become citizens. Well isn't that exactly what every American in China is doing?"

Instead of indulging in such fine praises as, "strained relations," or the necessity for reconsidering the bases of international treaties," he blurt out an ultimatum in this cackling fashion.

"Unless the United States government repeals the law which now excludes my countrymen from this country, we shall treat Americans to a dose of their own medicine."

This can not be considered elegant but it is plain, very plain, and stamps his excellency as a man of force and character. "You may amplify my statement," he says, "and make it as strong as you please." The free and easy statesman who tells his interviewer to make his report as strong as he pleases, who gives the reporter a carte-blanche for the employment of adjectives, and authorizes him to use his joyous imagination in emphasis and expression, may not be exactly the sort of a man one would employ to negotiate a delicate international negotiation, but he would be worth untold dollars to a good spare man on a paper.

Is this true though, are these interviews that from time to time are sprung on us not fables of the baldest kind? To believe that an astute diplomat of the Celestial Kingdom would so compromise his neck by the use of threats is on a par with believing that the Emperor of the Chinas himself would dance a break down in the summit of the Porcelain Pagoda for the detection of Nelly Bly, or so use his chop-sticks in the presence of a heathen unbeliever. China will do nothing that will injure herself. In a game of cunning with any European power she is quite capable of holding her own.

She has lately given France some pretty straight hints about Siam, but that is because she knows public sentiment in Britain and elsewhere would be with her.

(by a lover of nature)

From wood, from field, from flower and tree
The voice of nature speaks.
And dumbly blind and dead is he
Who loves not her retreats.
The world, the pomp of passing power
May while away a happy hour,
With pleasures that soon fade,
But give to me a leafy bower,
The cool refreshing summer shower,
The forest and the glade.

Oh where in cities bright with wealth,
Can scenes like this be found.
And what can half compare with health
On this enchanting ground?
From leaf and tree top gaily sing,
The bees and birds, and breezes fling
Their voices to the air.
And murmuring low, in one sweet wail
All blend in one and make the vale
An Eden pure and fair.

There may be those—then are forsooth.
Full many that complain.
Who love not solitude and truth
When combating for gain.
To me without the wild and free
All life would seem a misery,
With night as one long hour.
I love the mountains and the hill,
For peace and quiet their caverns fill
With dignity and power.

The sea, the sky, the wide domain,
What leads to worlds afar.
Have each their majesty of reign
A beacon and a star.
I love not so the crowded halls,
The revels gay and courtly balls,
As scenes that wild and grand.
Speak rather to the heart than eye.
And in untrammelled beauty lie
Beyond man's puny hand.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

REGINA, September 6.

Wilkins from the special committee appointed to consider Mr. Magrath's bill for the regulation of coal mines reported that the committee had examined the bill and recommended its passage as a necessary provision for the protection of life in the working of coal mines.

Dill introduced a bill to give Levi Thompson a certain status as a student at law.

Jelly asked the executive committee if it was the intention of the executive committee to make representations through the assembly to the Dominion government or parliament relative to an increase in the Dominion Grant.

Haultain replied that it was the intention of the committee to do so.

Magrath's bill to regulate the operations of coal mines with a view of providing for the better protection of the lives of the operatives was considered in committee. Mr. Dick an expert in the employ of the British Columbia government who had just completed an inspection of the mines at Anthracite, Cammore and Banff being present.

Brett wanted time to consider the bill before it was passed by the committee.

Magrath insisted that it should be dealt with at once when the expert assistance of Mr. Dick would be available.

The bill was considered in committee and the several clauses agreed to without serious amendment. Progress was reported.

The amendments to the elections ordinance were finally passed.

House adjourned until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

September 6.

Neff's bill respecting infectious diseases of domestic animals passed through committee, read a third time and passed.

Princes bill to provide that chattel mortgages made outside the Territories require registration in the Territories and to provide that no mortgage given on growing crop should be valid except the mortgage were given for seed grown was read a second time.

Davidson's bill to extend the ordinance for the preventing of profanation of the Lords day so as to prevent shooting on Sunday was read a second time.

Neff's bill noxious weeds was read a third time.

The Edmonton Tramway bill was considered in committee and progress reported.

REGINA, September 7.

Page reported from the committee appointed to enquire into the question of collecting agricultural statistics that such statistics would be valuable, and recommending that the work be done through the agency of the members of the assembly in their several districts.

Mowat moved the first reading of a bill to provide for the establishment of public parks in towns.

Knowing moved the second reading of a bill to make formal amendments to the agricultural societies ordinance.

Magrath's bill to regulate the operation of coal mines was passed through committee of the whole and afterwards read a third time and passed.

Jelly introduced a bill to amend the exemptions ordinance.

Mowat's bill regarding municipal assessment was passed through committee of the whole.

Neff's bill to amend the statute labor and fire districts ordinance was considered at length in committee of the whole and progress reported.

No evening session.

REGINA, September 8.

Notice given by Jelly of a bill to regulate the toll to be taken by grist mills in the Territories was dropped by the mover.

Second readings were given the bills respecting exemptions, the advertising of stray animals and to give Levi Thompson a certain status as a student at law.

Knowing's bill to amend the agricultural societies ordinance, Dill's bill respecting unincorporated towns, Neff's bill respecting statute labor and fire districts and Princes bill respecting mortgages and sales of personal property were considered in committee read a third time and passed.

The bill to empower the town of Edmonton to construct a tramway was passed through committee of the whole.

The amendments proposed by the citizens committee to the bill to incorporate the city of Calgary were considered in committee of the whole. An additional clause was proposed to the effect that the bill should come into effect after being sanctioned by a vote of two-thirds of the resident ratepayers.

Haultain's bills amending the interpretation ordinance and amending the revenue and expenditure ordinance were passed.

No evening session.

REGINA, September 9.

Notices were given by Haultain of amendments to the school ordinance, by Oliver of amendments to the masters and servants ordinance and by Cayley of a memorial to ordinance disallowed some years ago.

Third readings were given the Edmonton tramway bill, the interpretation ordinance and the ordinance respecting revenue and expenditure.

Haultain moved the second reading of a bill to abolish priority amongst execution creditors. The bill provided that when judgment was secured against a debtor the judgment should be held for a month, and that all creditors who entered action within that month would stand on equal footing in case the debtor proved insolvent. The law was in force in Ontario and was in effect an insolvency act. While placing creditors on an equal footing it was no hardship on the debtor who would not be pressed so strongly by any creditor who knew that he was not in danger of being forestalled by other creditors.

Haultain moved the second reading of the consolidation of the judicative ordinance. There had been no important amendments in principle. The amendments made were chiefly in the line of setting forth more fully and chiefly the procedure. The present ordinance electoral that the English procedure should be followed in certain cases. The present bill gave the procedure in detail.

Cayley withdrew his bill regarding revenue and expenditure.

Dills bill respecting apprentices and minors was considered in committee. Objection was made that the safeguards for the proper apprenticing of minors were not sufficient. Progress was reported.

Pages bill respecting estray animals was considered in committee and progress reported.

The bill provides that persons who have estrays in their herds or on their premises must advertise the fact in the Northwest Gazette and after a certain time may sell the animal for expenses, the balance after payment of expenses to be held by the Northwest treasury until claimed by the owner of the animal.

The judicature bill was considered in committee.

WHAT RAILWAY MONOPOLY HAS DONE FOR NORTHERN ALBERTA.

MR. EDITOR.

Your editorial of 7th and 11th inst., and your Fort Saskatchewan correspondent's comments, have caused the writer to consider what benefit has been derived.

1st by the Calgary & Edmonton railway and 2nd by the settlers of the North.

He finds that the former received: 6,400 acres of land for every mile of construction, and a cash subsidy for 20 years of $80,000 per annum—and that the C. & E. was one of the cheapest built roads in America. Further that at the present moment no other short line, belonging to, or leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is worked with so little expense, and whose net profits are so large.

On the other hand, the settlers have the gratifying knowledge, that the Dominion statesmen for the purpose of assisting the syndicate to keep out any opposition via the Jasper Pass, have granted the C. P. Ry nearly all the vacant railway land Northern Alberta has, for the total construction of railways in it. Meaning that when Alberta is made a province, that it will have no good railway land left, in the north to subsidize railway construction, like any other province in the Dominion has. The grant we have just spoken of, is in addition to the C. & E. railway lands, (it is understood that the C. P. railway do not own this road altogether yet, though they soon will, but it was through their connivance it was built.)

Next we come to the train service into Edmonton, which the minister of the interior, at the public meeting held in Edmonton, some few weeks ago, laid so much stress on—saying how hard it had been to get it, and the strenuous efforts made by our N. W. members and the government to do so. All that we can say is, that we only wish that he and his confederates of the cabinet, had to remain in this Northern country, and each one own a farm, and have a few thousand bushels of grain, on hand each and have no cash in pocket, nor no home market to speak of, and then have a large family to support, and cap the whole by having to be at the mercy of the C. P. Ry, who place such an exorbitant tariff on the grain for export (the reduced tariff just to hand shows it to be something like 30c per 100 lbs for a haul of 50 miles) between Edmonton, Calgary and British Columbia, our market is not to the east; but to the west. Perhaps the minister of the interior, and the balance of the Dominion cabinet, would then understand what a bungle has been made, in their jugglery with the syndicate. A 5c a mile passenger tariff! and as for the car accommodation, and the mail service of the C. & E. railway it is only a case of the old story, "we asked for bread, and received stone." It is, in plain English, damnable.

In conclusion we would simply say: are the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Dominion government waiting for the people of Northern Alberta, to make the same uproar that Manitoba did, some two or three years ago, owing to the combined stupidity of both the government and the syndicate? If so, the sooner meetings are called all over the Edmonton district the better. It can easily be arranged to have several thousand copies of the proceeding of meetings printed, in the different languages, and disseminated in European and the United States. If the government and the Syndicate think that the present wretched state of affairs, can be allowed to go on, they are mistaking. What hurts us, hurts them. "Fire must be met, when it gets beyond control, by Fire."

WITH THE HUNTERS.

"Off duck hunting."

Magic words are these to the man who has been accustomed every year to take his week or two in camp and change his civilian life for the life of a hunter in the woods. Oh! the luxury of pitching your tent by a secluded lake where the ducks are plenty, with two or three loyal friends, plenty of ammunition and someone with you who can play the banjo or the guitar.

Ducks for breakfast, ducks for dinner and ducks for supper. Don't you get tired of them? No! sir, not a bit of it. Oh the deliciousness of roast duck toasted on the point of a stick over the ashes of a wood fire flavored with a little piece of home cured genuine Alberta pig. A meal in the Maison Doree at Paris is nothing to it. Delmonico's offers no such attractions, Gatti or Romano set a table you appreciate but half as much. Cinders grit, dirt—it all goes and after disposing of the bones frequently you cannot restrain yourself from licking the fingers that have held the dainty morsel. So much for appetite—didn't we have nine living examples of a duck hunters appetite return to us from such a trip a day or so ago. Their manly faces browned with the sun they had let winter down on them, and their cheeks and chin covered with a fair half inch of stubble beard, the result of a week's freedom, that reminded us of when first dropped our eyes on them of an Arizona mosquito bush. Command me to a duck hunting expedition for fun and frolic. Summer or winter what is it that comes up to a campaign in the woods? We recall an occasion last year when three of us started for a pond which empties itself into the Union river, among the timber land lakes of Maine. It was late in November, and when December made her bow to the people in the towns and the hunters in their woodland homes, we had on plunder well arranged in camp and had settled down to business.

Well cooked food in plenty, wood and water, the principal auxiliaries that go to make life in a log hut out amid the snow clad timber enjoyable, so one of our number was told off to do the cooking with the understanding that the other and myself were to provide the outside chores, an arrangement which left much less time in the hunt than the uninitiated would suppose.

Probably this was due to our stove which swallowed up more wood and gave out less heat than any other similar arrangements we have ever seen. We know that after spending one whole forenoon in chopping up white birch and piling it in its greedy maw, we entered suddenly to find the dog sitting calmly on the top between the pots and pans.

But with all the hard work and the discomfort occasioned by a leaky roof which drops an icicle down your back and spits at you when you are not looking, freezes every liquid in camp and leaves your clothes stiffer than boards in the morning. Genuine pleasure and change are the portion of the man who with an even temperament not ruffled by trifles essays to spend a few weeks in the silence of the backwoods. Here are a few lines apropos of camp life, that we remember were written by the hand of our party on an empty flour sack:—

Away with your collars, your cuffs and your ties,
You are dandies no longer, but good natured boys.
No licking a waiter because he was slow,
No telling the landlord to get up and go,
No coming home late without any tin,
No chucking the chambermaid under the chin.
No punching the bell and ordering a drink,
You must go to the bucket that stands in sink.
You may sing, you may shout, hang yourself on the hook,
If you keep out of the way of the cook.

There is snow on the ground, there is frost on the grass,
The icicles drop from the roof as you pass,
The trees over head away and swing in the wind,
And the path to the lake is not to be found.
But hang it what matters, who cares how it blows

There is room on the stove top for fingers and toes,
There is wood in the forest and tea in the pot
T'ween one and the other, you're bound to keep hot.
You may sing you may shout, hang yourself on a hook
If you only keep out of the way of the cook.

But we've wandered, and wandered gravely too. What we really wanted to speak about was who shot the Shikpoke last week in mistake for a goose. We believe we can point to the man who ate the odd duck, but the slaughter of the Shikpoke is what is troubling us now. We can imagine the scene. It was in the afternoon and all was still around the reed fringed lake, not a sound disturbed the harmony of the scene. Three hunters were together on a point that ran out into the lake, when one of the number spotted coming towards them far over their heads, a long necked gander. For a second he allowed his eyes to rest on it—yes—it was a gander sure. With the instinct of a sportsman he whispered to the others—"down—down, a goose—a goose," and a murderous light shone in his eyes as he convulsively clutched his gun in anticipated slaughter. All three squatted down and waited the monster's approach.

"Keep quiet boys—look at its neck—there's a beauty for you—my shot you know," said the discoverer, and then all waited.

Nearer it came. The sportsman cautiously raised himself up out of the bushes, squinted along the barrel and fired. His aim was true and his prey fell. With a whoop of triumph and a remark about the first goose falling to him he waded out regardless of getting his feet wet to where the feathered monster had fallen in the weeds, and saw not a goose but with unutterable disgust beheld a creature, half Bittern, half Crane.

This we imagine was one of those times when "Distance lends enchantment to the view."

"Nothing but a plaguey Shikpoke boys," he said, when he returned to his fellow-sports. And some one said, "He never smiled again."
